BRIEF HISTORY OF ALTRINCHAM PREPARATORY SCHOOL

Altrincham Preparatory School was founded in 1936. Bowdon College in South Downs Road, Bowdon, was closing down and some Altrincham Grammar School masters decided to take over this building to use it as a preparatory school for boys. The main intention being to use it as a feeder school for Altrincham Grammar School. The new school expanded rapidly and after the war, in the 1950's, the Governors acquired another building - Highbury, at West Road, Bowdon. Just after this the school developed into a two form entry school such as we know it today.

A widening curriculum and the poor state of the original South Downs Road building (leased) made it imperative in the nineties to acquire a site for building a complete Infant & Junior School. After a fruitless search (land is at a premium in this area) the Governors took the decision to build on the school playing fields at Marlborough Road. However, restrictions on space meant that we could only build a Junior School and Nursery. The lease on South Downs Road was allowed to expire. Highbury was refurbished for the Infants and the summer of 1997 saw the new school opened and the Infants re-housed in West Road.

APS has some 300 pupils and is universally described as a friendly and happy school. It has a distinctive atmosphere which couples academic excellence with breadth of opportunity and respect for variety of achievement. APS sets out to provide a compassionate, caring and benevolent environment in which pupils are encouraged to achieve their potential. There is a healthy demand for places at APS with each year having a waiting list in excess of 60 boys of whom, except when we run a three form entry, 40 are made offers of a place.

APS has some 38 employees of whom 24 are teaching staff. The School has 11 non-teaching staff of its own and also draws on the services of the Bursar and his assistant. The school uses the catering and cleaning services of Sodexo.

STATEMENT OF EDUCATIONAL PHILOSOPHY

Education, we hold, is a moral enterprise and APS aims to provide stable, uninterrupted, high quality education for its pupils, producing well-rounded articulate and confident young people who are well-equipped to face their next challenge in life. The implied educational challenge is the provision of an environment which encourages social, moral, physical and intellectual education. Our philosophy is directed by the opinion that the great thing to be gained from learning is that everything learnt leads to something further; learning should give the person the power to do something beyond itself. Education should not concentrate solely on the acquisition of knowledge and schools should not be just academic forcing institutions. If a school judges itself solely on mere scholarship (important as this is) by recognising success only in terms of examination pass rates then it is, we feel, failing to discharge its duties and obligations properly. Teaching should tell on a person's thoughts, speech and writing. Pupils should be prepared for the next stage of life by being equipped with self-reliance, modesty, practical good sense and a freeness of behaviour towards others. This cannot be achieved through classroom teaching alone requiring that you look to the person as a whole, trying to encourage the development of all their gifts and talents. The importance of the pastoral care provision and of extra-curricular activities (both athletic and aesthetic) is paramount in this respect.
